Biography

Livehouse Livehouse Born to parents who are both doctors and enthusiasts of Western classical music and culture, Chen Yi and her two siblings began music lessons at age three. She began learning piano and at age four was introduced to violin. She memorized works by classical composers like Mozart, Bach, Beethoven, and Tchaikovsky and was able to sing their compositions note for note. [7] At age 13, she was already an accomplished violinist. [8] During the Cultural Revolution , Chen and her siblings' studies were interrupted as they were taken to a work camp in the countryside. She continued to play the violin, but was only allowed to perform "revolutionary songs". [9] [1] At age 17, she returned to her hometown Guangzhou and became the concertmaster and composer of the Peking Opera in Beijing. [10] [11] In 1978, Chen was admitted to the Central Conservatory of Music where she received a bachelor's and master's degree.
